In this insightful composite adjective worksheet, students suggest missing combined adjectives in conversation questions and then ask and answer questions with a partner. Divide students into pairs (A and B) and give each student a corresponding worksheet. Students look at conversation questions that contain gaps in the worksheet and think about what any missing compound adjective can be. Students have two chances to guess the missing compound adjective in each question. Pupil A begins by guessing the missing adjective in the first question. Pupil B listens, looks at the composite adjective in their worksheet and tells his partner whether he is right or wrong. If Student A first comes to know, they score two points and write the composite adjective in the question. If not, their partner gives them a clue, saying the first part of the adjective. For example, if the composite adjective is English-speaking, the student will say English... If Student A guesses correctly on the second attempt, one point is awarded. If not, the composite adjective shall be disclosed and no points shall be noted. Pupil B then implies the missing compound adjective in the second question, etc. The winner is the student with the most points at the end of the activity. Students then ask and answer questions about talking to their partner. When all the questions have been discussed, there is a class feedback session to review the meaning of each compound adjective and go through students' answers to the questions. •Compound adjective, homework, spelling, March Complex word consists of two words that come together to make a new word.
